The 1894 was afterwards passed to remove doubts quite anable to make his vous over the hubbuh that ensued. This too plainant told him to wait until Mr. Thomas Memorialis sere by no means desirous of seeing hasty desire-a natural one, no doubt-to give aid ended in a very serious blunder. A few seconds siter the cry was raised an emergency boat manned by the fourth officer, Mr. El. J McBarnett, and five A. B.'s named J. Foster, C. W. Adams. G. Bungay, D. Sullivan, and A. Edwards, was lowered on the nort or weather side. There was however, too much excitement on board, and as the boat touched the water someone too hastily unbooked the forward tackle and the aft tackle was allowed to remain fast. A cross sea was running at the time and an alarming accident was inevitable. The forward part dipped into the water and the waves leant into the boat, which almost immediately swamped Edwards managed to cling hold of a rope and plimb up the side of the ship, but all the other men were hurled into the water and three of them were actually under the boat. All eyes eagerly scanned the sea for traces of the missing not empty and so could not be returned, but the wishes to protect the members of the Sanitary men and the progress of the small bust was closely watched. It was some time, though, before the ship lost way and when at length she steamed astern even the small boat could not be seen except with the aid of glasses. Eventually the Kaisar-i-Hind got back close to the signal life buoy and anxiety for the safety of the officer in the sum of $10 each to keep the peace. was depicted on the face of everyone. The crew in the small boat searched for nearly an hour and then had to return, with the worst news. Both the men had been lost. DEATH INQUIRY.

Yesterday afternoon an inquiry was held by Mr H. E. Wodehouse into the cause of the death of Adam Herbst, whose body was dragged up by a shrimp-boat man near Tsimtsatsui and handed over to the police on the 3rd inst.

Carl Waud, seaman of the German steamer Largana, said that Adam Herbst, the deceased was cook on the Lawang and was twenty-six years old. He saw deceased go, into the valley on the main deck on the 3rd January, and after that never saw him again. About half-an-hour afterwards he heard a noise amout the sampans. where the steamer was lying at the Kowlcon wharf, but thought it was a Chinaman who had fallen over from a sampan. He ran to the side of the vessel and saw the deceased in the water on the port side of the ship. He threw him the end of a rope, but deceased mank, before mid sea ton bib seatiw bon, it exies bluco ed again. of the Sanitary Beard, having been adopted and ratified by the Colonial Government, their note may be considered as the acts of the Government and the latter should make compensation to those who have suffered by such acts. Whother or not any binding undertaking was given by the Government at the time the Taipingshan Resumption Ordinance was passed that the owners of closed houses entaids the resumed area should be compensated for the losses they had incurred .a consequence of their houses having been closed for the general good, it is quite clear that the unofficial members of Council were under that impression when they consented to the Taipingshan Resumption Ordinance becoming law, and supposed at that time that both sets landlords would be treated blike; and your Memorialists were certainly under this impression when the then Acting Attorney-General stated the matter of compensation to owners of closed houses outside the Taipingshan District was under the consideration of the Government. 15.-Your Memorialists must again call attention to the incorrectness of the remarks of the Attorney-General when he said: " What the Permanent Committee did was this, where a medical certificate was given that a house was unfit for habitation it was closed until it was made fit.
